Lexicographers, those learned men with definitions for almost everything, define progress as "a steady forward movement...gradual betterment... progressive development."

While all of these dictionary definitions are certainly good ones, it appears to us that one word—Torrance—does the job much more quickly and just as graphically.

For since its founding 43 years ago, Torrance has emerged as a leading industrial center—a vital factor in the growth which has marked the Southern California area in recent years.

The progress that Torrance has enjoyed hasn't been confined solely to industry, as its fine homes, schools and churches attest. This is a healthy thing, since it provides Torrance with a solid foundation on which to progress even further.

As one of the pioneer members of the Torrance community, we can't help but feel a certain sense of pride as we notice the scores of industrial plants and the thousands of homes that knit this city together. And, like all others who have had a share in the growth of Torrance, we are looking forward to the coming years with great eagerness and anticipation.
